Who Poisoned His Meatball?

When the prosperous Nero Sharpe dies suddenly after a meal at Luigi's Italian restaurant, everyone asks, "Who poisoned his meatball?" After all, he practically owned the whole town. Hilarious accusations and condescending remarks fly among the customers and staff members. Included in the motley crew are several who could benefit from Nero's untimely demise, such as his wife, his bickering mother-in-law and his not-to-bright secretary who also happened to be his mistress. As head chef Basil Baker rounds up evidence and suspects, the wacky characters join in a surprising finale to reveal who killed Nero Sharpe. Was it the salad chef, Amaryllis, who brought out the fatal food plate? Or could it have been Luigi, desperate to escape the clutches of Nero's blackmailing schemes? What about Phyllis North, the ambitious reporter bent on getting a job at the "National Snoop"?
